RAWL Success Story: Halo

Every dog deserves a happy ending. Halo's story is not an uncommon one. Person acquires puppy, person does not take care of puppy, and puppy is forced to make up her own "life-rules." The result is a dog with no concept of how to interact with the rest of the world.

Halo, a one-year-old female Shepherd, came to RAWL in March of 2016 from a neighboring shelter. The animal control officer seized her from her owners after a welfare check deemed it necessary. Halo was chained inside a kennel living in her own waste, underweight, aggressive and no social skills to speak of. Despite all of her adversities, Halo had a light inside of her that just needed to be nurtured and the RAWL staff stepped in to help.

The days turned into weeks, weeks into months and Halo's daily routine was taking affect. She was learning how to "be a dog" and the days of fending for herself were becoming a distant memory. With love, kindness, a routine of obedience and exercise, Halo was learning that humans were helpful and supportive of her. That is when the light inside grew brighter and a more solid citizen emerged.

As with most dogs with behavioral issues it takes just the right person to see the same potential as we do. Approximately five months after Halo arrived, it happened. Halo's adopters walked through the door. Halo warmed up to them immediately and them to her. Though the first year of Halo's life was full of confusion and fear, we are proud to say that the rest of her years will be full of happiness and love... and she deserves every bit of it! 🐾

Halo smiling and happy in her new home and having fun playing in the pool.
